SYNOPSIS

"Sunday By The Sea" is an impression of the English enjoying the pleasures of the seaside, the images accompanied by music-hall ballads. A London family sets off to Southend, and on their arrival the camera records the activities and little adventures of this famous pleasure-drome, glimpses faces and characters in the crowds. An old lady is convulsed with laughter at a sailor's dummy; children watch a puppet show and explore the fairground and its sideshows; hundreds sun themselves on a packed beach, splash and swim in the water. At dusk, young lovers stand with their arms round each other on the deck of a pleasure steamer while, onshore, the illuminations come on one by one. Instead of the usual commentary the story is told on the sound track through songs made famous in the music halls.
